The View from the Vicarage

Where would we be without those who volunteer?

At the start of August there was a meeting of those directly involved in the running of the Benefice Magazine! I found out what a wonderful job they all did and how committed they were to getting the best edition out to everyone each month. They have soldiered on through Covid and through the Interregnum to ensure that each month there are interesting things to read about and to make sure that costs are covered. But it is not just down to them there is an army of dedicated folk who delivery it. They are on the front-line of working in all our parishes, meeting and serving those in our communities. Always ready to have a friendly chat whilst on their rounds. A very big thank you to everyone involved in the Magazine in its many varied strands.

There are the people who volunteer at the Washburn Centre who give of their time freely, who are equally committed to their work and serving the community by the giving of their talents and experience. We would be lost without those who help in so many ways to make our community a better place to live.

Let us not forget, the many people who give selflessly in so many ways connected to all of our churches. Like: Church Officers, PCC Members, Lay Ministers, Retired Clergy, Flower Ladies, Sides people, Cleaners, Grass Cutters, those who supply refreshments, people who work on our churches and never ask for payment, Organists...... The list goes on and on. Without all of you, this Benefice would not be the Benefice it is.

There are a wonderful array of gifts that are being used directly and indirectly to extend God's Kingdom here in the Washburn Valley. The gifts may all be very different, but they all ultimately stem from God's generous nature. In my prayers, I give thanks for you all, for all that you do.

Please, never think that you are taken for granted and that all that you do goes unnoticed. You are all part, and a valued part, of this rich tapestry which is the United Benefice of Washburn & Mid-Wharfe Benefice.

Every Blessing Teresa

News from Norwood Chapel

Dear friends.

Happy Autumn! I'm not sure it will feel like Autumn in early September . . . it all depends on the weather, doesn't it?! As I write these words in mid-August, the temperature is rising, and it looks like it will be a proper summer day with sunshine and warmth.

During the summer school holiday break, my family and I had some of our son's friends and their parents over for a game-board night. Folks come over early evening and we enjoy a variety of games . . . it's usually teens in one room and adults in the other. However, for the final game, we come together, gathering around the dining room table which has extra chairs and a card table added to it to ensure everyone has a place. We play "Herd Mentality" --- it's become tradition! In this game a question is asked, and everyone gets a chance to answer. The key to this game is to think of a common or most popular answer (not necessarily your own!) that most/all people around the table will answer. If your answer is one that the majority of folks use, you get a point. The key here is knowing the crowd you're with!

Here's one of the questions that has stayed with me over the past several days: If it were possible, which one of Jesus' miracles would you perform? This is not a religious or spiritual game and to have a question like that was intriguing. Also, it assumed the players had a knowledge of Jesus' miracles. Some folks said, "Turning water into wine!" Another person said she would like to be able to heal people. There are other miracles just as amazing and life-changing for those involved: feeding the five thousand, walking on water, calming the storm and raising the dead, to name a few others. All of these miracles benefited other people. The miracles were directed toward others rather than to Jesus, himself. When Jesus was in the desert, scripture tells us the devil tempted him with food, being rescued and power over all things. Jesus resisted all these temptations. In being rescued and power over all things. Jesus resisted all these temptations. In his ministry, he focused his miraculous powers on others. Therefore, lives were transformed with the healing of the mind, body and soul; fears were chased away; peace prevailed; hunger was relieved; new life took up residence where death had been.

If it were possible, which one of Jesus' miracles would YOU perform? And why? Yes, it would be incredible to have such a special power . . . but it's one that really shouldn't be used for self-gain or for selfish reasons. I encourage you to use your imagination! What does your family, friends, church, and village need the most? What miracles does our world need most? Maybe the climate and environment are on your mind or perhaps the continued brutal war in Ukraine. Maybe your concerns are closer to home and you desire peace and reconciliation to abound in daily living. Whatever comes to mind, pray about it and for the changes you think are needed. Maybe just maybe, God might use us in powerful ways to bring about the changes for which we pray. Perhaps in God's eyes, we all have the potential to be miracle workers! all have the potential to be miracle workers!

Grace and peace, ~ Rev. Shannon

Book Review

Barry Miller reviews and reflects on a recent book.

Awe: The transformative power of everyday wonder

By Dacher Keltner

Awe and wonder are words which have often featured in my sermons over the years so it's perhaps no surprise that when I saw the title of this book, I was drawn to it.

The author is a Professor of Psychology at the University of California. He's not a theologian and this is not intended to be a book about theology. As his field of research particularly focuses on the psychology of emotions his aim was to discover exactly what type of emotion 'awe' might be.

The book contains stories from people in 26 countries with a range of cultures and all major religions. These are stories of events in their lives which were awe inspiring. The definition of awe they were given was: "being in the presence of something vast and mysterious that transcends your current experience of the world."

Perhaps surprisingly spiritual experience or the love of nature were not the most frequently reported. Keltner classified the experiences into 'wonders of life', the first of which he called 'moral beauty'. This was when people were moved by the kindness of other – usually heroic acts which we may even see in news items such as rescue attempts in disasters. This was followed by a second 'wonder': those important life experience which are shared with others such as family Weddings, Christenings or Jewish Bar mitzvah.

Next came the wonder of nature; then the wonders of sights and sounds as in stirring music or magnificent art; then religious and spiritual experiences, followed by times surrounding birth and death which were common to all cultures, and finally those moments in life when we suddenly understand 'essential truths' when we say 'Wow, I get that!' – the eureka experience.

I should say that I felt there were rather too many stories to illustrate the points he wanted to make. It's quite a lengthy book (over 300 pages) and only in hardback at present, but it's fascinating nonetheless.

I began by saying it wasn't a book about theology and yet as I read on, I understood why he gave it the subtitle 'the transformative power of everyday wonder'. He demonstrates that a sense of wonder is essential for a fulfilled life. It has the ability to inspire curiosity, expand perspectives, foster humility, enhance relationships and promote well-being.

Isn't this also what the study of theology is and the Christian faith provides us with? It's those moments when we experience 'being in the presence of something vast and mysterious that transcends our current experience of the world'. That was his definition and it's what some theologians have called "the sense of the presence of God".

The Birds in Your Garden

Long-tailed Tits

Long-tailed Tits, in spite of their diminutive size, seem to go out of their way to be noticed. Constantly calling to each other as they move about in small flocks and easily spotted when they fly into the open, these charming birds are unmistakable, thanks to their lollipop-stick physique. By late August Long-tailed Tits start forming mixed flocks with various other tits, Treecreepers, Goldcrests and warblers, and can be found pinging along hedgerows and woodland. Truth be told, The Long-tailed Tit isn't really a tit at all, differing in its behaviour and appearance from our familiar Blue and Great Tits, being more closely related to the warblers of Africa and south-east Asia

This year seems to have been difficult for Long-tailed Tits, with their Garden BirdWatch counts for July so far being lower than in 2022, as well as being below their long-term average. This is likely to be a knock-on effect from the cool spring and heavy rain we experienced earlier in the year. Most tits and tit-like species produce only one brood per season, laying up to nine eggs in the case o Long-tailed Tits. (Though 15 have been recorded in exceptional cases, possibly from multiple birds laying in the same nest.) If these large broods hatch during poor weather, the parents will struggle to find enough food, causing many nests to fail. If this has been the case, we will continue to see lower numbers throughout the rest of this year. However, their numbers should quickly recover if the weather next spring allows.

Until fairly recently, Long-tailed Tits were regarded as rare visitors to bird tables, but BTO Garden BirdWatch results have shown an increase in their use of gardens, and the food provided in many of them, over the last couple of decades. In winter they are found in flocks, usually of 6-8 birds, but possibly up to 20, and even occasionally reaching 50 individuals en masse. They are very active as dusk approaches, before heading off to roost in thick shrubbery such as a hawthorn. They are guite often one of the last birds seen still to be feeding in the late afternoon. Being so small, they lose a lot of energy overnight when it is cold, and so to keep warm they huddle up together, often in crevices or tree forks.

During daylight hours in winter, they must feed continually, and their gregarious nature is apparent as they roam in flocks through woodlands and hedgerows chattering to each other in \(\frac{1}{2}\) a high-pitched voice as they go: hence one of their names, 'Chitterings'. Their call is a sharp 'tsurp', repeated several times. Once heard, it is easily remembered and is often the first indication that a flock of Long-tailed Tits is in the area. When they find productive feeding areas, they share the information by calling enthusiastically to each other.

nwharfemidbenefice.or

Having a delicate beak, long-tailed tits are primarily insect-eaters, though they will take to peanut feeders and fat balls in gardens, but don't be surprised if they choose not to hang around for long, Long-tailed Tits always feel safer if they move on quickly. Although insects are a good source of energy, they are much more difficult to find in the cold of winter, though there are

Memories of Summer

The Glorious Twelfth dawned, the tents were up and the tables set for Denton and Weston's Parish Barbecue, Chris Monkman prepared delicious food, Mike MacDonald manned the Bar and we were off! An afternoon of fellowship and fun with a Tombola, Splat the Rat and Ping Pong Pots to keep the young and young-atheart amused.

Jonathan Smith exhibited his beautiful paintings inside the church, so there was something for everyone to enjoy. The day ended with Chris conducting the auction and then the heavens opened. All retreated into the shelters apart from Chris, who carried on regardless. Heartfelt thanks to him and Bernie who transported tables and chairs and to all who helped, supplied shelter, donated prizes and generally supported this biennial event. Well done everybody!

Who is my neighbour?

By Anne Buxton

Not just a biblical quote, but something many of us may ask these days. Our villages are spread out and tend to lack a focal point other than the church. We do not have the local shops or schools that used to be meeting places for neighbours. Our roads are busy and traffic fast, so there is little inclination for a leisurely stroll through our villages and even those with dogs try to leave the road as soon as possible. Which all combine to mean that many people do not know their neighbours, and this has become even worse since COVID. Families have moved in and out of our villages, and hardly know anyone local. Those of you who have lived here for a long time know we have some wonderful people in our Parish. Some have lived many decades and know much about our local history. Some have lead full and exciting lives. Some have developed rare and special talents.

We would like to publish a series of interviews with Parish residents so we can all "know our neighbour".

Few people like to blow their own

Few people like to blow their own trumpet, so we would like volunteers 2 who are willing to conduct a short interview with a neighbour to share with other neighbours. If you would like to conduct an interview, or have a suggestion of someone we should interview, please get in touch with the editor, Anna Bowman.

Way Hay!! Or perhaps, "way say!"

Leathley Parish Room can now boast a super smart new set of "WCs", thanks to generous grants from The Bramall Trust, a National Lottery award from The National Lottery Community Fund and a series of fundraising events over the last few years.

Those of you familiar with the hall will recall the trudge up the draughty, sloping corridor to our rather tired toilets, much beloved of spiders and daddy long legs. The water heater had a mind of its own and the room heater didn't really live up to its name. The gentleman had to push the ancient iron arm of the "heritage" lead lined cistern back up after each use. No more!

The new toilet block opens directly from the hall, making life much easier for those with push chairs, wheel chairs or just wobbly legs. There is a disabled toilet with a "help" alarm, and baby change facilities. The hot water comes out hot, and the heater actually heats the facilities! And with an easily cleaned sealed floor and back to wall toilets, no hiding places for spiders. So, please do come along to one of our events and marvel at our wonderful new loos!

Gardeners Corner

The year is whizzing by and it's time to think ahead. September is a good time to plant bulbs for spring colour. Start with prepared hyacinths which you can pack tightly into bowls for indoor scent and colour and they may be ready for Christmas. Ideally use bulb fibre and plant with the tops of the bulbs half out of the compost. Store the moist containers in a dark, cool but frost free place for two or three months to allow the roots to develop, before bringing them into the light. Daffodils, crocuses and iris bulbs can be planted outside in September. As a rule of thumb, plant bulbs at a depth of at least twice their height.

Harvesting orchard fruit will keep you busy this month. When ripe, apples should come away from the tree when the fruit is lifted gently. Perfect fruits can be wrapped individually in newspaper and stored in cardboard boxes in a cool, dry place such as a garage, but do check them periodically to make sure there are no rotten ones to spoil the rest. You can pick blackberries until the end of the month – delicious with cooking apples in a pie

Independent Advisory Groups

Are a way for our diverse communities to work with us to help improve our service. An IAG is consists of members of the public meeting in each of our policing areas.

IAG members are members of the public who have an interest in the community and the policing of it. Members are not expected to be a spokesperson or crumble.

The baby birds should all have fledged by now, so it is safe to trim hedges and clean out nest boxes ready for next year. Time also to put the bird feeders back up.

The summer raspberries will have finished fruiting, so cut back the old canes and tie in the new. Autumn raspberries should be coming into their own now for harvesting. Leave their canes until next year for cutting back in February.

I grew sweetcorn for the first time this year. To check if they are ready, push a fingernail into a kernel. If they release a milky sap they are ripe; if it is watery wait a bit longer.

Perennial wildflower meadows can be cut right down, leaving the cuttings in situ for a few days to allow the seeds to drop out before removing all of the cuttings. The idea is not to increase the fertility of the soil.

Enjoy September – it is a lovely month!

A Morning's Reflection

I was looking out into the garden at the beautiful trees on a wet day. So many different hues of green eaves. One branch of the lilac tree looked dead and I thought that it needed to be cut off; it was no longer useful.

Suddenly three sparrows flew on to it, two young ones and an adult bird, balancing on the old branch the older bird fed its young. As I watched I realised what I thought was dead and finished still had a place, a purpose and God's creatures needed it.

Never feel too old or useless.
